BORAH GIVES WARNING

DEFENDING the Constitution of the United States in a speech at Hagerman, Idaho, the other day, Senator William E. Borah gave voice to this timely warning:

"In the bewildering mass of governmental schemes now sweeping the countries of the world, there is one malign purpose running through them all, and that is to control-if not ant said, men being as God has destroy—the liberty of the citizen. Whether it is the Fascist, the Communist, or the bureaucratic state, the result is the same -waste, debts, taxes and ultimately complete subjection of the people to the government power."

It is a fact, as Senator Borah indicates that every encroachment of public liberty starts out with the promise of giving something to the people. The government actually can give nothing since everything it gets comes from the people. Take the matter of relief as a striking example of this. All the money poured out for this purpose comes from those who have property or jobs; it is from this source the relief money comes. This is a thusiasm and ability with which fundamental fact that must be kept in mind.

He declared: "He that spareth his rod hateth man? his son; but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes." Perhaps many parents, who, wielding a slipper or a razor strop, have exclaimed "This hurts me, my son, more than it hurts you," have fallen back for a defense on this adjuration of the wisest of all the men who have walked

At any rate, Solomon's injunction has been invoked by the parents of a school district near Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, in a demand that the teacher be dismissed. Anthony Munley, for forty years the teacher, was declared to be too gentle, so gentle, in fact, that he neglected to flog his charges or to assign them home work, that bane of childhood. A strange commentary on parental solicitude. Matching the complaints of a half-dozen parents were, however, the commendations of others, who pointed to the gentleness and kindness of the teacher. American landed the Frenchman was one of the first to welcome himhis master, as the Colonel said, though in Bleriot's words Lindbergh was "the prophet of a new era." When Bleriot achieved his great feat aviation was regarded less seriously than it is now. That the comparatively crude French monoplane should have flown at the speed of 45 miles an hour made its pilot a heroic figure the world over.

"The most daring aviator in the world," as he was once described, Bleriot made other short-distance records, until one day his plane crashed at Constantinople and forced him to give up flying. Then he undertook the manufacture of airplanes, both commercial and military, the latter eousness forsaken, nor his seed begduring the World War. His prediction that "the day is not far off when we shall be able to leave Paris in the morning in an airplane, have luncheon the same day in New York and return to Paris in time for dinner" has not yet been realized, but who shall say that it will not be?

In death Bleriot's fame as an aviator is secure. Whatever advances in flying may be made, he will always be held in remembrance
